DETAILED ACTION

The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless -

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

Claims 1-5 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by EP 0,861,803.

EP '803 discloses a process for producing chlorine from hydrogen chloride in a sequence of steps using a combination of fixed bed catalytic reactors operating in two distinct temperature ranges. As shown in the Figure 1, a group of four reactors arranged to permit each of the four principal steps of the process to be carried out simultaneously. Accordingly, reactors 10, 11, 12, and 13 each contain a fixed bed of Deacon reaction catalyst. Also, each of these reactors have indirect heat exchange means such as heating or cooling coils 14 and 16 associated with reactors 11 and 13, respectively. The corresponding coils for reactors 10 and 12 are not shown (note page 5, lines 44-46). The reactors 11-13 are clearly shown in Figure 1 as being connected in series.

The catalyst material in EP '803 can be any catalyst operative in the Deacon process. In general, such catalysts are well-known and are described in the technical literature and issued patents. Often alkali metal chlorides, such as sodium or potassium chloride, are included, as are salts of rare earth metals. Suitable supports include well known carriers such as alumina, silica, silica-alumina and various known zeolite molecular sieves. These supports are considered inert, but this does not preclude the support material from having an enhancing effect upon the activity of the catalytic compounds (note page 5, lines 22-32). When more than one compound are used as the catalysts or when the support has enhancing effect, the catalysts in EP '803 are considered as having "at least two kinds".

The process of EP '803 anticipates the claimed process.

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negatived by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-12 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over EP '803.

EP '803 discloses a process as mentioned in the above rejection.

EP '803 discloses that the process has four steps:

In step (a): an HCl-containing stream is directed into a defined volume in contact with a fixed bed of Deacon reaction catalyst containing supported metal oxide species.

The temperature of step (a) is in the range of 180 to 290°C, and the reaction proceeds to convert at least a portion of said metal oxide to metal chloride species, forming water in the process.

Art Unit: 1754

In step (b): the HCI-containing stream is redirected to another catalytic fixed bed volume for repetition of step (a) while heating the first bed of catalyst having just completed step (a) to a temperature in the range of 300 to 400°C for performance of step (c) which, under certain conditions, can be combined with step (b).

In step (c): the heated catalyst of step (b) is contacted with an oxygen-containing stream at a temperature in the range of 300-400°C, to form metal oxide species in the heated catalyst suitable for use in a repetition of step (a). This reaction produces chlorine and chlorine-containing gas is withdrawn in an effluent stream.

In the final step (d): the oxygen-containing stream of step (c) is redirected to another volume for repetition of step (c) and the bed of catalyst having just completed step (c) is cooled to a temperature in the range of 180 to 290°C, thereby separating the catalyst bed for repeating step (a) (note page 3, lines 12-34).

EP '803 further discloses that by using fixed bed catalysts instead of fluidized beds, the disadvantages of the fluidized beds are overcome while retaining the advantages and flexibility of carrying out the reaction in two process steps under the optimum conditions for each steps. Thus, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention was made to optimize the volume% of the first catalyst bed, the thermal conductivity, the activities in the reaction zones of the process of EP '803 in order to maintain the desired temperatures and to obtain the best results.
